

Attempt at Exhausting a Place in London

One weekend in the middle of October 1974 the French writer Georges Perec set himself a challenge - to describe everything that happened in place Saint-Sulpice, Paris. Not a record of the buildings or history of the square, but a record of that which is not noticed, that which has no importance: what happens when nothing happens. 40 years later writers Nathan Penlington and Sarah Lester replicated Perecs experiment - with a few important similarities and a few significant changes, most notably relocating to a square in London, a small insignificant square in the North East borough of Hackney. In a major departure from the original protocol this is more than the work of one writer, a collaboration between two observers with differing sensibilities and styles - the overlaps and deviations of the simultaneous accounts underlining the impossibility and futility of the task. Part documentary, part poetry, part catalogue - An Attempt at Exhausting a Place in London is more than a homage, it is a surprisingly witty, tender exploration of urban life.
