

Impressions of America

Excerpt: ...the walls were thickly coated with ivy, like the tower of an English village church. We mounted the stoop, which commanded a vast extent of valley bounded by distant hills, Pg 222 only needing water to make a perfect prospect. A few moments after we had rested here, the mistress of the place made her approach, hoe in hand, for she had been tending her flowers in person. Such a dear old shepherdess of a woman I have not seen for many a day, with all the poetry and enthusiasm of nineteen, and a pastoral, simple, unworldlike air, worthy the golden age of the flower-wreathed sheep-crook. She had an anecdote connected with every flower-bed;
