

The Log of a Sea-Waif, Being Recollections of the First Four Years, of My Sea Life (Classic Reprint)

Nor does the output show any signs of lessening, while the quality of the work done is certainly not deteriorating. Writers like Kipling, Cutcliffe Hyne, Joseph Conrad, and Clark Russell, each in his own style, have presented us with a series of sea-pictures that need not fear comparison with any nautical writers work of any day, although they deal almost exclusively with the generally considered unromantic merchant service. Having admitted this, the question perforce follows, Who, then, are you, that presumes to compete with these master magicians? To that inevitable question I would modestly answer that the present book is in no sense a competitor with the works of any writers of nautical romance.
